4. What are the types of cookies?

(a) strictly mandatory cookies

These cookies are mandatory for the website to enable toe user to browse the website and use its functions, for example, to remember the information input into forms when the user switches from one page to another page during the session. Without the strictly mandatory cookies it is also impossible to provide certain services of the website, the website cannot function as efficiently as it shall function. These cookies do not collect any information for marketing purposes, and they do not "remember" any information about what you visited on the Internet.

(b) analytical cookies

Analytical cookies collect information about the use of the website, and help to enhance the functioning of the website. For example, the analytical cookies can show which pages are most frequently visited, to help to register problems at the website, and to show whether the ads on the website work efficiently. Analytical cookies do not collect any personal information of the users and all information collected by them is anonymous and generalized.

(c) functional cookies

Functional coolies allow the website to remember your options and to provide improvements for the functions best suited for your needs. Functional cookies also remember the changes you made, for example, certain customizations of the website you made, or in other cases, such as you view a video record, or leave a comment at our website. Functional cookies do not collect information about your actions at other websites.

(d) target or promotional cookies

Target or promotional coolies are used with the purpose of demonstrating various ads that can be of your interests, or when it is needed to limit the number of ads shown at the same website. These types of cookies are also used for evaluating the efficiency of the promo campaign. These cookies can be used to remember what you looked into when visiting the website.
